Intelligencer, We down that hands and a rather sluggish demand. We quote prime obligations and a rather sluggish demand. We quote prime In Fors for January, Mr. Ruskin, unhis old servants wrote to him lately on ters apart from the iron-works; but rse of his letter he asked his hether there were any hopes heiner again started. The Mr. Crawshay was as follows: worse than ever it was, and I slightest chance of Cyfarthfa of Cyfarthfa e very long, and if I am I the works before I die othing now to bind me to then tween masters and men, which the master's fault, and the neilt of the defiance of every of human relation by modern ny. High-Bred Animals.

for the farmer except for the propa-on of improved grades by crossing on f common stock; hence, a farmer at large expense procured a herd flock of pure bred stock, finds then eriorating in condition and appear-te, and less productive than he ex-ted. This has been the almost unicted. This has been the almost uni-real experience of farmers. In select-ganimals for purchase, those that have e most attractive appearance are gen-ally chosen, with little regard to any-ing else than to please the eye. The regest and best proportioned, or those of e most fancied colors, are preferred, cause they are the most conspicuous buts, and they appeal to the sight rath-than to the expert judgment. The inits which make a pure bred animal doable to a farmer as a means of imable to a farmer as a means of im-ring his herd are not these, but such is deeper and require experience and ment to detect. The fine bone, small quality of flesh, vigorous constitu-, and hereditary excellence, do not tys—in fact, rarely—accommany exways-in fact, rarely-accompany ex ve size or attractive appearance; former go to make up the true value an animal for the farmer who seeks to aprove his stock rather than the latter.

Balky Horses.

I now the Home and Farm.

I once heard of an unfortunate gentlena who had become insane, but was retored to sound health by simply causing he mind to make a sudden revulsion shich was done by akilitully causing im to become jealous of his wife, who zas a most excellent lady, and aware of he process. On this hint we might learn to manage a balky horse. He is insane to the subject of going; that is self-evient. If we can manage to make him If we can manage to make him on some other subject, he will natlly forget about going, and go before knows it. The following devices have n successfully tried to accomplish the red end: 1. Tying a string around horse's ear close to the head. 2. the horse's ear close to the head. 2. ditching the horse to the swingle tree by seans of a cord instead of the tugs; he cord fastened to the horse's tail. 3. Tiling the mouth full of some disagree-ble substance. 4. Tying a stoot twine round the leg, just below the knee, and han removing it when he has travelled one distance. Never whip a balky orre, for the more he is whipped the ratier he will become. Let everything a done gently, for boisterous words only mnine him and make him worse. Treat limin the mild manner that you would a reasy man, and you will succeed.
